

Profiles in caring.

We salute the UI health care professionals who go the extra mile.

An ophthalmology clerk transports a patient and her husband to the hospital for surgery because neither one can drive. A physician accompanies a heart transplant patient to religious services. And a member of the pathology team comforts a grieving family, helping them through an arduous ordeal and walking them to their cars. All acts of humanity given above and beyond the call of duty. These are just some of the contributions made by the faculty, staff and volunteers at University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics. During National Hospital Week, we celebrate the many ways that generosity, outreach and care transform the lives of those we serve.
